

Dear Sir:

I am absolutely opposed to the FCC mandating rules for so called "protecting" digital content with copy protection hardware and or software embedded in my electronic devices. I will not purchase such devices and if necessary remove them from any that I may have. I know the government is pretty much controlled (bought and pay for) by the RIAA and the MPI but some of us out in the vast wasteland will stop this "Big Brother" plan. What I choose to bring in to my home is mine to do with as I choose and the Hollywood thugs are not going to tell me what I can or can not do. They choose to send me material so as to make as much money as possible and I choose what to do with it once in my home. This greed has just gone on far enough. How much more money do they want for the trash they peddle? I have written to my Senators and Representatives in Congress to try to find someone that has not yet sold out and put a stop to this plan. A popular movement is very hard to stop once it gets moving.

Truly yours,

Jeffrey K. Risner
